

Sinclair
Broadcasting's
decision to force
their stations to air a partisan smear
documentary days
before the November
presidential election is a clear
example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. When large companies control a large portion of the airwaves across the nation, only the interests of a greedy few are served. Instead of something produced
at "Electioneering Central" far away,
what our democratic republic needs is to see people from our own communities and more substantive
news about issues
that matter.

Sinclair's actions
show why we need to strengthen media
ownership rules.
Only the rich and
powerful can afford to buy up media
broadcasting
resources across the nation. Only the
rich and powerful
benefit from such consolidation.
